What These Products Are

Tianeptine ('gas-station heroin') appears as shots, capsules, tablets, and flavored liquids. Products are branded as supplements or 'elixirs,' making them hard for parents and staff to identify. Tianeptine acts on opioid receptors and is not FDA-approved.

Why SROs Should Be Alert

- Sold in gas stations and vape shops under names like ZaZa and Neptune's Fix
- Causes opioid-like effects including respiratory depression and withdrawal
- Students may carry small bottles or blister packs in backpacks and pockets
- Branding mimics energy shots, vitamins, or nootropics
- Potency varies widely between brands and batches

SRO Response Guidance

- Confiscate & notify administration immediately
- Treat any ingestion as high risk—call EMS for altered mental status
- Photograph packaging and document statements
- Refer student to nurse if drowsy, unsteady, or vomiting
- Store packaging in an evidence envelope if impairment is suspected
- Notify liaison if quantities suggest distribution
